

Please do not lift the cell phone ban on aircraft. I can imagine few things more irritating than some rude individual chit-chatting, arguing with a lover, or making unimportant plans that could wait until later six inches from my ear when I am captive and cannot get up and leave the situation. If it is to be allowed, please create a soundproof "telephone booth" on planes where these individuals need to go to make calls so they don't disturb others. Of course the marathon talkers would probably not think of being considerate of others waiting for a turn to use the booth. Nothing good could come of lifting the ban and many bad things could come of it.
